Architect and designer Aldric Beckmann created the new Hotel Parister in Paris, France.

The hotel was created to satisfy a demand for wellness services in the area and offers multiple amenities that focus on one's well-being and care. With its 20-meter indoor pool, a private spa and a holistic body, mind and soul center, the Hotel Parister is now a main tourist attraction in the area.

As well as the amenities, the new hotel features one-of-a-kind contemporary design features, with a bold color scheme and individually designed guest rooms. The Hotel Parister by Aldric Beckmann is made up for two cuboid buildings: the first holds the restaurant, bar and reception area, and the second contains the 45 guest rooms.
